Since Russian President Vladimir Putin invaded Ukraine, the EU has been looking for alternatives to Russian fossil fuels. For almost a year, the bloc has been reeling from an energy crisis that has only been exacerbated as Putin, who supplies the EU with 40 percent of its gas, squeezed supplies to exert pressure on the bloc.

As the bloc looks for alternatives, many are tipping renewables like wind and nuclear power to ensure energy security.

An expert has noted that the UK is in a prime position to replace Russia as a major energy exporter to the EU by developing its wind capabilities.

Speaking to Express.co.uk, Zoisa North-Bond, CEO of Octopus Energy Generation, said that while in the short term, the UK Government needed to figure out a way to reduce energy bills, it also needs to plan for the long term.

She said: "Actually, into the future, we shouldn't be afraid of building as quickly as we possibly can."
