

MPS CALL FOR “SWIFT JUSTICE” AGAINST PROTESTING VANDALS

Grumblings from the Tory backbenches are growing over the seemingly slow response to violent protesters seen over the past fortnight. Andrew Bridgen this afternoon tweeted he is looking forward to the same “swift justice” being applied to all those caught on camera vandalising statues that was seen with Andrew Banks, who urinated next to the memorial to PC

Keith Palmer in Westminster. Other backbenchers tell Guido there cannot be an impression of unequal justice...

Andrew Bridgen

@ABridgen

I am pleased that the man who urinated next to the memorial to PC Keith Palmer has been punished. I look forward to equally swift justice being delivered to those individuals caught on camera, vandalising statues and desecrating war memorials, justice delayed is justice denied.

Ipswich MP Tom Hunt agrees, telling Guido that he praises the "swift" action against the man "urinated on the memorial to dedicated to PC Keith Palmer". He went on to tell Guido it is "important that such swift action is taken against all those who have desecrated our war memorials and statues". Mark Francois has gone one step further, telling Guido:

"We only enjoy a right of democratic protest in this country because people fought and in many cases died, to defend it. Anyone who desecrates a war memorial dishonours all those people fought for, so not only should we lock them up - we should melt down the key."

Video evidence of those climbing on the cenotaph in an attempt to burn the Union Jack, as well as vandalising statues and other monuments is in abundance. One Tory MP tells Guido that the statue of Edward Colston was a Grade II listed structure - and that criminal damage to such statues ordinarily carries a maximum sentence of ten years under the Criminal Damage Act. Law and order Tory MPs are ramping up the pressure to prosecute.

 I already feel our society is halfway down a particularly unpleasant sewer. If our so-called forces of 'law and order' do not take action against those who have despoiled monuments to our history and committed other forms of vandalism and lawlessness then we shall be cutting the safety rope and waving the whole edifice bye-bye as it slides off into a sea of stinking cesspool communistic corruption.

 Maybe I am being unnecessarily prejudiced (I'm white so of course that is a possibility) but it would have been edifying to hear these condemnations from our Prime Minister and members of the Cabinet once Black Lives Matter had disposed of one statue, and threatened others. War commemorations of course should be protected with heavy penalties for idiots that vandalise and destroy them, but so should others. No one has got the right to dispose of public art/culture or amenities because they don't fit in with personal agendas and points of views, and the pandering to this by councils and others I personally find nauseating.

I can only hope that those UK citizens responsible for desecrating monuments, statues and the like will very soon be on the receiving end of the full force of the law. I also hope that those found not to be UK citizens will be deported immediately..

This is a very good test for the impartiality not just of the police themselves in tracing and arresting those responsible, but for the whole criminal justice system. Justice, as represented by the statue atop the Central Criminal Court, is supposed to be blind and not inclined to treat anyone differently in law (or sentencing) because of the popularity of any particular cause of the day. There is a wealth of video and eye witness evidence that should see several people arrested, tried, convicted and adequately sentenced for their acts during the BLM protests, the Cenotaph incident right up there. Putting back any trials in the hope that memories might fade and outrage be lessened is in itself a form of injustice. Swift justice in such cases is vital to restore trust in our CJS and we are watching. Once again, sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

Other than the opposing ideologies the urinating incident and the defacement of war memorials etc are not equivalent. I'm quite sure the the urinating was without malice and at best was just thoughtless. The same cannot be said of the vandalism from the left. Following on and know we know the political bias of the police sooner or later they will lose all support from a large swathe of the British public assuming, of course, that that isn't already the case!

You're all being led down the garden path
Distracted by a single tweet with a wish, which is definitely not government policy

There are 649 behind him who stood silent while the laws of this land were selectively applied to what was once in the UK called a criminal activity.

The very same 650 MPs who find Parliamentary time to pass emergency legislation in one evening.

not to force sanctions against the perpetrators of filmed criminal damage,
But to ban all, including peaceful marches.

Because banning our freedoms suited their cause, establishing one law for all does not

I can see a time, in perhaps 10 years, when large numbers of Brits and other Europeans will be making their way to eastern block countries to live, as cities and towns become unlivable and the quieter villages becomes so expensive.

Yes,many are already making plans,as are the business owning ones and the tax paying ones over in America, moving in an ever growing group over to Republican controlled areas,moving out from the anti American Democrat ran areas that were following their plan for the riots,all being done to mess up Trumps chance for reelection.

It would take a bit of time,but, like in America,all the ones supporting the infrastructure in the bad Democrats controlled areas,that allowed the riots,are all taking their tax payments,their business payments over to the now Republican areas, the Democrats areas will soon become ghost towns,especially if they remove the police, same thing for hundreds of thousands,if not millions,of Europeans/British people,some of the eastern areas leaders would welcome them with open arms,and even offer a few incentive's,people will just up sticks and move away from their areas where they now live if the anti British,lefty,Marxist ones win with their destruction agenda.

Eastern Europe - Poland, Hungary, Bulgaria, Romania, Greece, the Balkans even Austria had their own experiences of Ottoman empire migrants/tourists/invading armies from the 16th to the 17thc. Wislam made quite a negative impact and the people in these countries have not forgotten. Exposing the realities of Wislamic migration is consequently acceptable - but the EU might have something to say.

Seems to me that anyone who is here on a residency permit only, and commits a crime, has rejected the privilege of living here and needs to be chucked out. If his gender-transitioning daughter needs his support, she can have it in the country he is deported to, though goodness knows what support he has given while he was in prison.

To the people who desecrated our war memorials, statues and set fire to our country's flag, I hope you are caught and punished accordingly.

Our war memorials are a mark of respect to the hundreds of thousands of people who gave their lives for Britain, so that you can enjoy the freedoms you have today. We are extremely proud of them. Our history doesn't belong to you. It belongs to Britain and it is not yours to erase.

It is a shocking reflection of our times that small minorities of whatever nature should successfully intimidate the majority and neutralise MPs in such an intimidatory way. If one degenerate is given the maximum sentence for a trivial offence which would not normally be even punishable, then those who have committed major offences by desecrating national monuments, must surely also be given maximum sentences for the appropriate crime. We are indeed on a slippery slope if justice is not seen to be even handed, and why exactly are the police so reluctant to prosecute one side whilst imposing speedy justice on the other? We have a national emergency which is being muffled and played down at every official level. Why?

Sprsixone  THE THIRD R... 9d

Why?...because the MSM who are in thrall to and sometimes directly in the pay of the globalist manipulators, will jump all over any MP or official who does not tow the the current BLM narrative.

Even the Cabinet and especially the PM bend to the MSM pressure almost on a daily basis to perform U turns.

We are in a very bad place and it will only get worse until someone starts to provide some disciplined firm leadership.

So true,added to that is a large group of very clever,and trained up at speaking ones,they can twist all conversations around to their warped beliefs, they have been well schooled for many years on how to talk around in circles waffling away saying nothing,and always have planted in their arrogant heads 'they are always correct',you are not,and their main move is to 'Persuade' people to believe their views only,by repeating all the time,you can always tell when they are losing the argument,all of them do the same actions, they get loud,and will over shout or get nasty and threatening,the only way to return to a sensible place is when a brand new political party is in place,a party that represents the real British people and come down extra hard on all the anti British ones.
