Britons aged 18 and over can now book their Covid-19 vaccine in England in what the NHS has described as "a final push to protect the country".

All adults are urged to arrange a job if they have not had one and the health force will start to send about 1.5 million texts to people aged 18-20 from Friday morning.

It comes after government data up to June 16 showed that of the 72,891,861 jabs already given in the UK so far, 42,216,654 were first doses – a rise of 195,565 on the previous day. Some 30,675,207 were second doses, an increase of 234,834.

one million appointments in a single day. In Northern Ireland and Wales, the Covid-19 vaccination programme is already open to those aged 18 and over.

And in Scotland, all 18 to 39-year-olds are being invited, with older age groups first, in the specific areas of Glasgow affected by the current outbreak.
